One of beauty's tastiest secrets

It's often said that eating small amounts of best quality chocolate (ie. 70% cocoa mass) can be good for wellbeing, Chocolate contains essential trace elements and nutrients such as iron, zinc, potassium and vitamins A, B1, C, D & E. Cocoa itself is also the highest natural source for magnesium. Magnesium deficiency is linked with hypertension, heart disease, diabetes, joint problems & pre-menstrual tension, which explains why so many of us crave for chocolate through our period.

Of course, we all know that chocolate tastes great, and that nibbling on it is always a sensory pleasure. But cocoa butter can also be a wonderful beauty treat because it's an incredibly effective moisturiser.

If your skin is very dry, try rubbing cocoa butter directly onto rough heels or the balls of your feet. If you wear cotton socks overnight, you'll wake up with beautifully soft feet. A small amount of pure cocoa butter in a microwaveable bowl melts down gently at half-power and can be rubbed on your hands as a lotion.

By giving yourself a Chocolate Salon Treatment once a month you can indulge all your senses. There are several different chocolate or cocoa butter-inspired spa/salon treatments such as facials, body treatments, body wraps, manicure, pedicure and massage.

Chocolate treatments (or Chocotherapy as it's also known) tap into your endorphins sending anti-stress messages to your brain, enhancing your mood. Not only will your state of mind be relaxed and calm, but your skin will be left feeling super-soft, glowing and completely re-hydrated.
